Discussion Requirements:

To receive full credit for your participation in this discussion, you must post a minimum of two comments, questions, arguments, etc., that address the discussion prompt and do BOTH of the following:

1) First, you must post your own original response to the prompt. This need not be a journal-length response, but your response should contribute a well-reasoned response to some aspect of the discussion question. You may submit your post by contributing to an existing thread or by creating a new thread.

AND

2) Second, you must review other students’ responses and offer a thoughtful and critical response to at least one other posting. Please note: “I agree” is not a thoughtful response, nor does “critical” equal “negative.” The point here is to contribute postings that encourage a lively yet respectful discussion.

Instructions:

Click the “Discussions” link on the main menu. The discussion prompt and any additional instructions/guidelines will be posted on this page. Click on the “JEP Discussion” link. You may click on the thread to reply to the prompt and read others’ responses. Or you may create a new thread (see below).

To review all of the postings, go back to the “Forum: JEP Discussion” page and click the box in the grey frame above all the list of threads to select all postings. Click “Collect” and a new page will open with each individual post listed by date.

To respond to another student’s posting, click the orange “reply” button next to the thread. Enter your message (and upload any attachments, if relevant) and click Submit.

To create a new thread, return to the “Forum: JEP Discussion” page and create a new thread. Give the thread a subject/title and enter your comments in the Message box. Click submit.

If you have any problems accessing or posting on the Blackboard, discussion, try accessing it through another web browser. For example, if you are having trouble using Safari (historically buggy in Blackboard), try using Firefox.

The discussion will be available beginning Monday April 2nd. The last day to participate in the discussion is Friday April 6th at 11:59pm. You must complete all of the above requirements by this date.