Mixed-Race Families in the West: What is Lost and What is Gained?

Saturday, November 16, 2013 // 8:30-2:00
Ahmanson Room, Botanical Center
The Huntington Library

Free, open to public

The Huntington-USC Institute on California and the West (ICW) is convening an inter-disciplinary workshop exploring issues of mixed-race and multi-ethnic identity in the American West. Drawing from the region’s historic diversity, the workshop will consider the role that California and the West plays in shaping the nation’s understandings of mixed-race families and individuals, and also how education, politics and the media are being shaped by the growing mixed-race population.

This workshop, which is designed around a series of open-ended discussions and commentaries, will bring together participants and commentators from diverse backgrounds to explore the history and future of mixed-race identity and experience in the West and the nation. The workshop will be divided into three panels, each addressing particular themes including identity, demographics, politics, education, and media. We hope that this cross-disciplinary examination will lead to ongoing conversations about this critical shift in personal and collective identity, and their potential influence on Southern California and the nation.

rsvp to kmatsuna@usc.edu
Mixed-Race Families in the West: What is Lost and What is Gained?

Saturday, November 16, 2013 // 8:30-2:00
Ahmanson Room, Botanical Center
The Huntington Library

Free, open to public

The Huntington-USC Institute on California and the West (ICW) is convening an inter-disciplinary workshop exploring issues of mixed-race and multi-ethnic identity in the American West. Drawing from the region’s historic diversity, the workshop will consider the role that California and the West plays in shaping the nation’s understandings of mixed-race families and individuals, and also how education, politics and the media are being shaped by the growing mixed-race population.

This workshop, which is designed around a series of open-ended discussions and commentaries, will bring together participants and commentators from diverse backgrounds to explore the history and future of mixed-race identity and experience in the West and the nation. The workshop will be divided into three panels, each addressing particular themes including identity, demographics, politics, education, and media. We hope that this cross-disciplinary examination will lead to ongoing conversations about this critical shift in personal and collective identity, and their potential influence on Southern California and the nation.

rsvp to kmatsuna@usc.edu