In celebration of the 20th anniversary of the Jesse M. Unruh Institute of Politics, Bill Boyarsky — former Los Angeles Times journalist, Unruh biographer and friend of Jesse Unruh — will moderate a series of informal discussions with figures in California politics. The second guest in the series is California State Senator Tom McClintock (Republican, 19th District).

First elected to the California Assembly at the age of 26, he served in the assembly from 1982 to 1992 and again from 1996 to 2000. During these years, he authored California's current lethal injection death penalty law, spearheaded the campaign to rebate $1.1 billion in tax over-collections to the people of California, and became the driving force in the legislature to abolish the car tax. From 1992 to 1994, McClintock served as director of the Center for the California Taxpayer, a project of the National Tax Limitation Foundation. In 1995, he was named director of Economic and Regulatory Affairs for the Claremont Institute's Golden State Center for Policy Studies, a position he held until his return to the assembly in 1996. In 2000, McClintock was elected to the California State Senate. Senator McClintock currently serves as vice chairman of the Senate Transportation and Housing Committee. He also serves on the Public Employment and Retirement Committee and the Committee on Legislative Ethics.
