

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS (GLOBAL BUSINESS)

Future leaders in business, government, and law need to understand how global developments affect their lives and work. This major provides the detailed information and conceptual tools you will need to thrive in the rapidly changing world of tomorrow. With numerous travel, research, and internship opportunities, it is an ideal major for those interested in entering the realms of business, advocacy, or public policy.

BACHELOR OF ARTS (BA) GENERAL OVERVIEW

Lower-division Courses:

- Principles of Microeconomics or Microeconomics for Business
- Principles of Macroeconomics or Macroeconomics for Business
- Fundamental Principles of Calculus or Calculus I
- International Relations: Introductory Analysis

Six International Relations courses:

- One International Political Economy elective course
- One regional course
- One IR 400-level course
- Three upper-division International Relations courses

Six courses at USC Marshall:

- Foundations of Accounting
- Applied Business Statistics or Introduction to Statistics for Economists
- Four courses in one of the following business concentrations: International Finance, Global Marketing, or Global Management

ACADEMIC OPPORTUNITIES

Center for International Studies: Established to promote advanced research and sustained discussion, CIS runs a program of frequent speakers and seminars on political and economic issues.

Delta Phi Epsilon: Delta Phi Epsilon is USC's co-ed foreign service fraternity. They promote academic excellence in international relations through guest speakers, current events discussion, and "coffee chats" with professors. DPE also engages in many humanitarian service projects and runs various professional development programs, including internship and graduate school assistance.

Study Abroad: Travel to England to study at the prestigious London School of Economics and Political Science or travel to Germany to study in Berlin through USC Dornsife's Office of Overseas Studies.