INFRASTRUCTURES OF DAILY LIFE
Technology and Environment in the Middle East

Begüm Adalet is Assistant Professor in the Department of Government at Cornell University. She is the author of Hotels and Highways: The Construction of Modernization Theory in Cold War Turkey (Stanford University Press, 2018). Her writings have also appeared in Comparative Studies in Society and History and Comparative Studies of South Asia, Africa, and the Middle East. Her current project explores the relationship between land reform, population management, and territoriality. She received her PhD in Political Science from the University of Pennsylvania with specializations in political theory and comparative politics.

Jessica Barnes is an Assistant Professor at the University of South Carolina in the Department of Geography and School of Earth, Ocean and Environment. Her research explores the cultural, political, and material dimensions of resource use and environmental change in the Middle East. Publications include Cultivating the Nile: The Everyday Politics of Water in Egypt (Duke, 2014), Climate Cultures: Anthropological Perspectives on Climate Change (Yale, 2015, coedited with Michael Dove), and articles in Cultural Anthropology, Society and Space, Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute, Geoforum, and Nature Climate Change. She is currently working on a book about bread and wheat in Egypt, titled Precarious Staples: Wheat, Bread, and the Taste of Security in Egypt. Jessica holds a PhD in Sustainable Development from Columbia University.

Kaveh Ehsani is Assistant Professor of International Studies at DePaul University in Chicago. His books include Social History of Oil in Iran (in Persian, forthcoming 2020); Working for Oil: Comparative Social Histories of Labor in the Global Oil Industry (2018, co-edited). Recent articles include “Urban governance and municipal politics in Tehran”; “Abadan: Rise & demise of an oil metropolis”; “Moral economy of Iranian protests”; “Pipeline politics in Iran”; “War and resentment: critical reflections on the legacies of the Iran-Iraq War”; “Oil, state, and society in Iran in the aftermath of WWI”; “Radical democracy and public space”; “Politics of property and privatization of the commons in Iran”. He has worked as a regional planner at the World Bank, UNDP, Johns Hopkins’ Institute for Policy Studies. As a development planner in Iran he has worked on water resources planning, drought, urban governance, and post-war reconstruction. He is contributing editor of the journals Gofogu (Dialogue) in Tehran, Middle East Report (Merip), and Iranian Studies.

Joanne Randa Nucho is an anthropologist and filmmaker who is currently Assistant Professor of Anthropology at Pomona College. Her book Everyday Sectarianism in Urban Lebanon: Infrastructures, Public Services and Power (2016), part of the Princeton University Press series on culture and technology, is based on 16 months of ethnographic research in Lebanon. Nucho’s non-fiction film work has screened in various contexts, including the London International Documentary Film Festival in 2008 and Los Angeles Contemporary Exhibitions in 2017.

Sophia Stamatopoulou-Robbins is an anthropologist whose research interests include infrastructure, waste, environmentalism, climate change, colonialism and postcoloniality, austerity, platform capitalism and property. Her first book, Waste Siege: The Life of Infrastructure in Palestine (Stanford University Press, 2019), analyzes the politics, socialities and materialities of waste and its infrastructures in the post-Oslo West Bank. Her new book project investigates the joint world-making of austerity and platform capitalism by examining how Airbnb is transforming the relationship between subjectivity, real estate, and work in Greece. This Airbnb project is also increasingly becoming multi-sited—moving between Israel/Palestine and Greece, for example—as it follows webs of foreign investors, real estate agents and interior designers also imbricated in Airbnb’s social, infrastructural and economic “ecosystem.” Her other publications include pieces in the American Ethnologist; International Journal of Middle Eastern Studies; Comparative Studies of South Asia, Africa and the Middle East; Arab Studies Journal; Jerusalem Quarterly; Anthropology News; New Centennial Review; and the Refugee Studies Centre Working Paper Series at the University of Oxford.

M. Fatih Tatari is a PhD candidate in sociocultural anthropology at the University of California, Davis. He holds a BA in economics and an MA in sociology, both from Boğaziçi University, Istanbul, Turkey. His dissertation research investigates the making of boundaries and places through dairy farming and scientific knowledge production on artisanal cheeses in the Northeastern borderlands of Turkey. His research interests include anthropology of the state; science and technology studies; economies and ecologies of agriculture and pastoralism; human-nonhuman relations; senses; place/space; commons and uncommons.