The Department of Spanish and Portuguese and the Mellon Mays Undergraduate Fellows program invite you to a lecture by

Professor Abraham Acosta
(University of Arizona)

“Thresholds of Illiteracy: The Fictions of Sovereignty and Decoloniality”

Monday, February 23, 2015, 4:00 p.m.

Taper Hall of Humanities (THH) 309K
University of Southern California

Abraham Acosta is Assistant Professor of Latin American Cultural Studies at the University of Arizona. He specializes in literary and cultural analysis, focusing on questions of subalternity, postcoloniality, and biopolitics in the Americas. His research traverses the critical realities of contemporary multilingual contexts, where assumptions of power, knowledge, and capital crosshatch with historical translations of cultural difference. Acosta’s work has been published in such journals as Dispositio/n, the Journal of Latin American Cultural Studies, Social Text, and Critical Multilingualism Studies. His book, Thresholds of Illiteracy: Theory, Latin America, and the Crisis of Resistance (2014) is published by Fordham University Press.