Session 2: Pacific from Broad Security Perspectives

Chair/Moderator: David Kang, USC

David C. Kang is Professor at the University of Southern California, with appointments in both the School of International Relations and the Marshall School of Business. At USC he is also director of the Korean Studies Institute. Kang’s latest book is "East Asia Before the West: Five Centuries of Trade and Tribute" (Columbia University Press, 2010). He is also author of "China Rising: Peace, Power, and Order in East Asia" (Columbia University Press, 2007); "Crony Capitalism: Corruption and Development in South Korea and the Philippines" (Cambridge University Press, 2002), and "Nuclear North Korea: A Debate on Engagement Strategies" (co-authored with Victor Cha) (Columbia University Press, 2003). Kang has published numerous scholarly articles in journals such as International Organization and International Security, as well as opinion pieces in the New York Times, the Financial Times, the Washington Post, the Los Angeles Times, and numerous Korean and Chinese newspapers. Kang is also a regular consultant for both multinational corporations and U.S. government agencies. Professor Kang was previously Professor of Government and Adjunct Professor at the Tuck School of Business, Dartmouth College. He has been a visiting professor at Stanford University, Yale University, Seoul National University, Korea University, and the University of Geneva. He received an A.B. with honors from Stanford University and his Ph.D. from Berkeley.

David Arase (Pomona College)

David Arase is a Professor of Politics at Pomona College in Claremont, CA specializing in Japan and East Asian relations. He is a graduate of Cornell University (B.A. liberal arts), the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies (M.A., international relations), and the University of California at Berkeley (Ph.D., political science). He has had dissertation fellowship support from the Japan Foundation and research fellowship support from the Center for Global Partnership. Author of many shorter publications and the book Buying power: the political economy of Japan's foreign aid (1995), editor of two books, and co-editor of The US-Japan alliance: balancing soft and hard power in East Asia (2009), which won the 2011 Ohira Special Prize for work on Pacific basin issues. He has visited at the Institute for Southeast Asian Studies (Singapore) and the Institute of East Asian Studies at UC Berkeley, and has taught at the School of Oriental and African Studies in the University of London and the University of Tsukuba in Japan; next academic year (2011-2012) he will be teaching at the Johns Hopkins University-Nanjing University Center for Chinese and American Studies in Nanjing.

Tuong Vu, Assistant Professor, University of Oregon

Tuong Vu is an Assistant Professor of comparative politics in the Department of Political Science at the University of Oregon, and co-editor in chief of the Journal of Vietnamese Studies. He has previously taught at the Naval Postgraduate School in Monterey, CA, and was a visiting fellow at the Asia Research Institute, National University of Singapore in 2007-08. He is the author of Paths to Development in Asia: South Korea, Vietnam, China, and Indonesia (Cambridge, 2010), and co-editor of Dynamics of the Cold War in Asia: Ideology, Identity, and Culture (Palgrave, 2009), and Southeast Asia in Political Science: Theory, Region, and Qualitative Analysis (Stanford, 2008). His articles have appeared in many scholarly journals, including World Politics, the Journal of Southeast Asian Studies, Studies in Comparative International Development, Communist and Post-Communist Studies, and Theory and Society. Currently he is working on a book about the Vietnamese revolution as a case of radical movements in international politics.

William Tow, Australian National University, College of Asia and the Pacific

Previously Professor of International Relations at the University of Queensland and at Griffith University, and an Assistant Professor of International Relations at the University of Southern California (USC). He has been a Visiting Fellow at Stanford University, and a Visiting Research Associate at the International Institute for Strategic Studies (IISS) in London.