The Social Networks of Antiquities Collectors in Northern-Song China - Talk by Prof. Ya-hwei Hsu

Tues, Mar 24 | 4:00-5:30PM | ONLINE

FLYER | RSVP

*UPDATED TO ONLINE SESSION* - This talk has been updated to an online presentation. Please email Prof. Sonya Lee (sonyasle@usc.edu) if you would like to attend the online session of this talk. The Northern Song dynasty (960-1127) of China has often been compared with the Renaissance in the West. Scholar-officials began to collect and study remains from antiquity, especially bronze ritual objects which had become an important category in Emperor Huizong's (r. 1100-1125) imperial collections. Prof. Ya-hwei Hsu will investigate this fervent development by examining five extant catalogs and treatises.

Chinese Archives in Crisis: An International Workshop at Stanford

Application Deadline: April 15, 2020

In Fall 2020, Stanford will convene a group of researchers, archivists, librarians, and policymakers to examine the past, present, and future of China's archival crisis. This workshop will take place October 16-17, 2020 at Stanford University and will attempt to place the present moment in historical context, situating today in conversation with the history of earlier "crises" (notably during periods of war and revolution). The workshop will also address questions of pedagogy, asking how China's archival crisis should, if at all, change the nature of graduate and professional training. On that front, the workshop will chart out strategies that scholars can use to navigate this period of crisis. Interested applicants are encouraged to apply.
