

Graduate Certificate in Latinx & Latin American Studies

The Graduate Certificate in Latinx and Latin American Studies provides a foundation for USC students who wish to gain expertise in interdisciplinary research and public-facing scholarship that focuses on Latinx communities within the United States and in Latin America. The certificate's innovative hemispheric and interdisciplinary approach will provide graduate students with unique analytical tools that can be used to engage with a broad range of social and cultural issues.

The Graduate Certificate is open to PhD students in any USC program. It requires doctoral students to take a total of 16 units. In addition, students may take electives approved for their particular program of research by the program faculty. One of these courses may be a research workshop course geared toward doctoral prospectus development. Directed research may not be counted towards the award of the certificate.

In addition to the completion of the course requirements, students must demonstrate a focus on Latinx and Latin American Studies as a meaningful component of their doctoral dissertation. This will include working with faculty with expertise in Latinx and Latin American Studies on the doctoral committee (as a primary advisor or minor member). Faculty will be responsible for judging the adequacy of the Latinx and Latin American Studies component in the student's dissertation.
