EDITING

Editor-in-Chief, The Princeton Series in the Foundations of Contemporary Philosophy -- state-of-the-art books on areas of research in contemporary analytic philosophy, written by leading experts. Each book is a high-level introduction to advanced thinking in an area. Although major questions and approaches are covered, the books are neither neutral literature surveys, nor specialized contributions filling gaps in well-known research programs. Instead, each presents a unifying vision of a field or topic--its recent history and leading themes, its significant new developments and its most important unanswered questions. The goal is to articulate synoptic views of active research areas in order to develop common understandings and chart future progress. The books are designed to appeal to advanced undergraduates and graduate students, to provide specialists with new ideas and unifying perspectives, and to offer explanations of neighboring fields to other working professionals.

In addition to creating the series, choosing authors and topics, and reviewing the manuscripts, I wrote the book in Philosophy of Language. Other published series books include Epistemology, Philosophical Logic, Philosophy of Law, Truth, Philosophy of Physics: Space & Time, Philosophy of Physics:
